

Is Aledade's Physician-led ACO Right for You?

Today's primary care physicians face an increasing load of administrative burdens, especially those related to quality reporting requirements. The American Academy of Family Physicians (AAFP) reports that more than 60 percent of family doctors have contracts with seven or more payers, and these physicians shoulder the responsibility for reporting different quality measures to each one.

For independent primary care practitioners already feeling the strain of a constantly changing healthcare landscape and limited resources, administrative burdens can only further impede their ability to successfully transition to value-based care.

By pairing primary care practices with access to user-friendly technology; timely, actionable patient data; and expert workflow and change management guidance, Aledade helps physicians take a proactive approach to limited resources and administrative burdens so they can focus on delivering the highest quality of care to their patients, which in turn, surfaces enhanced revenues through quality-driven payment models.
