

FEDERAL RESERVE BANK of ST. LOUIS

Laura Taylor

Government Relations Advisor

Laura Taylor serves as the government relations advisor at the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis. In her role she works directly with members of Congress and their staff, as well as with the Senate Banking and House Financial Services Committees. She works to provide Congress with economic research, data, and Federal Reserve resources to assist members and staff in understanding the economy, monetary policy and bank supervision.

In her 10 years at the St. Louis Fed, Taylor has also managed executive communications and media relations for the president, as well as led the social media, marketing and analytics teams.

Taylor received her bachelor's degree in journalism and master's degree in media management and political communication, both from Southern Illinois University Carbondale.
