We will offer an overview of the latest clinical, theoretical, and research findings on addictive behaviors for adolescents and adults. At its conclusion, participants will be able to describe and categorize major issues in addictions and the recovery process, as well as delineate recent advances in treatment. Learning Objectives: As a result of attending this course participants will be able to: identify boundaries between healthcare and law enforcement; examine strategies for changing addictive behaviors and understanding racism in opioid treatment; summarize the self-medication hypothesis; evaluate the risks of vaping, e-cigarettes, cannabis, methamphetamine, and opioid use; recognize the impact of pharmacogenetics, trauma, and adolescent addiction; and explain the stigma associated with substance abuse and the myths and realities of substance use in and after pregnancy.
