

Ember is an open air bar and restaurant with the feel of a sophisticated but casual Mediterranean social club. The venue opened in late 2008 and has become the crown jewel of downtown Orlando and won the "Golden Brick Award" for outstanding achievement in architectural design from the City of Orlando. The 3.8 million dollar build out of Ember has been highly praised for the use of reclaimed Italian wood which was once used in a cathedral. The design of Ember also encompasses the original brick walls of the existing building which was built in the early 1900s. All of the fixtures in Ember are custom made and no expense was spared in the design and execution of the venue. The open doorways welcome you outside and onto downtown Orlando's largest open-air terrace filled with beautifully manicured palm trees and Mediterranean arches of the various bars on the terrace. In the very center of the terrace is the large cabana bar covered with an old world tile roof and surrounded by large arches and columns. Flat-panel 42" plasma screens hang down from the ceiling behind the Cabana bar. The Cabana features a covered area adjacent to the bar. Turning away from the bar and facing north there is an outside entrance with a huge arch and giant, custom made wrought iron gates. Above the gates and built into the towering brick arch, flames shoot from two torches greeting Ember's guests. Turning west an elevated terrace supports a smaller corner bar called the "Brick Bar". While walking south along the "Upper Terrace" populated with low top lounge seating, which connects to a larger corner bar called the "Tower Bar". The Tower Bar has high, open arches, a custom bar top and another seating area with low top lounge seating and tables. The Tower Bar has two flat-panel 42" plasma screens embedded in each wall behind the north corner bar. Ember is truly a beautiful and unique venue perfect for any type of large party event where a lively and unique experience is desired.
