AFRICA

MUYUNGA BRIAN - UGANDA

Muyunga Brian is an ecumenical youth leader from Uganda and a member of the Anglican Church of Uganda, currently serving as the Executive Secretary for Youth at the All Africa Conference of Churches (AACC). In this continental leadership role, he is responsible for developing frameworks, programs, and capacity-building initiatives that equip young people to participate meaningfully in the life, governance, and mission of the AACC, their respective churches, and the broader socio-political transformation of their communities and nations.

Brian also serves on the World Council of Churches (WCC) Central Committee and the Commission for Youth in the Ecumenical Movement, where he contributes to global ecumenical policy formation, intergenerational dialogue, and the articulation of youth perspectives within international theological and justice-oriented discourses. He holds a Bachelor of Science in Biomedical Laboratory Technology from Makerere University (Uganda) and a Bachelor of Divinity from St. Paul's University (Kenya). His interdisciplinary academic formation—bridging biomedical sciences and theology—shapes his commitment to integrating scientific inquiry, ethical reflection, and faith-based praxis in advancing the mission of the Church and sustainable development across Africa. Brian's scholarly and practical interests center on Pan-Africanism, ecumenism, youth agency, and holistic development. His work is grounded in a vision of a just and equitable society in which all people live with dignity. He is particularly committed to mobilizing young Africans to recognize the continent as the locus of their identity, vocation, and future, and to contribute their skills, creativity, and energy toward Africa's sustainable development and shared prosperity.

HEATHER RODENBERG – UNITED STATES

Heather Rodenberg is a doctoral student at the University of California, San Diego (UCSD), pursuing a joint PhD in Political Science and International Affairs. She is affiliated with both UCSD's political science department and the School of Global Policy and Strategy. Her research centers around how communities worldwide build local stability in the aftermath of conflict. She is especially interested in how the international context shapes that process, both in supporting resilience and in undermining community-driven cohesion. This work is grounded in both personal and professional experience. Heather's journey began in Eswatini while her parents served Global Ministry missions, and she has since lived across the United States and the United Kingdom. Prior to her doctoral studies and informing this work, she held roles in the U.S. government, including at the Department of Justice's Environment and Natural Resources Division, U.S. Africa Command, and supporting civilian harm mitigation efforts at the Department of Defense. In addition to these professional roles, she also volunteers at the International Rescue Committee to support refugees in her local community. Heather holds a master's degree in international relations from the University of Cambridge and attended William & Mary in Virginia for her undergraduate studies. She can also frequently be found enjoying Southern California beaches and trails or at home working to perfect her chocolate chip cookie recipe.
