Miners warn of heritage fallout

By BRADEN QUARTERMAINE
Business Reporter

A plan to heritage list a huge part of the Kimberley has drawn an angry response from the mining industry, which says it would create additional red tape and hamper an end to the mining boom.

The Federal Government is assessing the West Kimberley region for heritage listing, with a decision expected within two years.

The Associated Mining and Exploration Companies said the move would have a devastating impact on mineral exploration and investment in mining.

AMEC public affairs manager Darren Brown said the Heritage Council approved the request that the future of mining would be seriously damaged. Those involved in mineral exploration and mining projects, particularly in WA, are subjected to an already burdensome approval process, he said.
