

Evelyn Galletti

Evelyn is a Principal in Deloitte's Higher Education practice with 18+ years of project leadership experience. She helps colleges and universities design and execute technology-enabled transformation initiatives to advance their missions. Her work focuses on administrative modernization, financial management, and budget model redesign—areas that are increasingly central to institutional resilience in a challenging operating environment.

Prior to Deloitte, Evelyn worked in Financial Planning & Analysis at Vanderbilt University, where she reported to the CFO and served as budget officer to the COO. In that role, she supported the institution through several major transformations, including the spin-off of its medical center, a Big Bang Cloud transformation, a move to GAAP-based budgeting, and the implementation of a new budget model for internal reporting. That firsthand experience gives her a practical, real-life perspective on the challenges higher education institutions face with managing the financial health of an institution.

Evelyn brings deep experience driving end-to-end transformation and turning business objectives into realized value. Prior to her higher education focus, Evelyn led multinationals through the strategy, design and delivery of global shared services and outsourcing initiatives across multiple functions. She works across the full suite of enterprise performance management tools used by Higher Ed institutions and applies that experience to help institutions strengthen financial management discipline, modernize operations, and create more sustainable models for the future.

Evelyn holds an M.B.A. from NYU Stern and a B.A. from the University of South Carolina Honors College, where she was Phi Beta Kappa. In her spare time, she serves on the Board of Directors (on the Finance Committee, of course) for Nashville Ballet.
